Weekly Weather Hazards Assessment Central America

2) Some model solutions are indicating that the current tropical wave just south of Hispaniola could stay organized and affect northern Central America on Sunday and Monday.

3) Field reports continue to indicate that there have been 90 to 100% of crops lost in the Primera season in south-central Honduras. The reports also indicate that rain totals are about half of shows the potential for showers over the weekend and again early next week.

4) Heavy rain continued along coastal indicates that the rain showers should diminish somewhat and be less intense for normal for the month of June. The forecast

Nicaragua. Flooded areas continue to be a problem, especially the regions highlighted where satellite estimates from this past week were above 100mm. The forecast the impending hazard period.

1) Rainfall totals for the month of July from hydrologists with the INSIVUMEH dryness region. The forecast indicates latter half of this week and through the confirm what the satellite estimates have shown, which is an emerging that showers are possible during the are 25 to 50% below normal. Field reports weekend.

